Australian New Labelling Requirement on Baby Bath

Australian Government has published a mandatory safety standard "Trade Practices (Consumer Product Safety Standard) (Baby Bath Aids) Regulations 2005" for Baby Bath Aids. Baby bath aid is a device designed to support a baby while the baby is being bathed. The purpose of the Regulations is to require the products to be labelled with a warning about their usage, and thereby reduce the incidence of drownings which occur when infants are left in these products without adult supervision.

According to the Regulations and by May 12, 2005, a warning together with two safety alert symbols shall be labelled on both the baby bath aid and its packaging. However, the warning is not required on that packaging, if the packaging is colourless and transparent, and the warning is clearly legible to a person through it.

Here under is an example of the label.
